

About the Contributors

Samantha Hughes' archival career began with the Reserve Bank in 1985. Since then she has held long term contract positions with the Sydney College of Advanced Education and the Council of the City of Sydney. She is currently an Archivist/Records Management consultant.

Sister Marie McGlynn was appointed archivist at the Good Samaritan Generalate Archives, Glebe Point in 1986, and, attending the New South Wales University, completed the Graduate Diploma in Information Management — Archives Administration. She is an Arts Graduate from Sydney University, and taught in the New South Wales State Department of Education and in Good Samaritan Colleges at Glebe Point, Wollongong and Manly. She is a member of the ASA Sydney branch.

Lee McGregor, Queensland's State Archivist, has been with the State Archives for nearly twenty years, and was a member of the first ASA Council, 1975-1977. More recently, she has been Secretary of the State and Territory Archives Group and involved with policy developments over the past two years relating to Queensland administrative reforms, FOI, and archival legislation.

Ian Maclean has held, beginning in the late 1940s, senior archival appointments with the Commonwealth, two States, and SEATO, has carried out overseas consultancies and written prolifically on archives and records matters. In retirement, he undertook a Research Centre project with the Australian War Memorial and is currently a consultant with the Archives and Historical Studies Section of the Department of Defence.

Alison Pilger has a history honours degree from the Australian National University, where she received several prizes and a University Medal. She was a recipient of an Australian War Memorial Summer Vacation Scholarship during 1991-1992. She is completing the University of Canberra Graduate Diploma in Library and Information Management specialising in Research and Archival Resources, and is currently employed with the Australian Dictionary of Biography.

Graeme Powell has worked with the National Library of Australia for over twenty years, his many appointments including its Australian Joint Copying Officer, London, between 1979-1987. He was Convenor of the ACT Branch of the ASA during 1991-1992 and is currently serving a second term as the National Library's Manuscripts Librarian.

Denis Strangman, currently with the Department of Administrative Services, Canberra, worked for sixteen years as Secretary to Senator Brian Harradine (Independent, Tasmania). He has completed archives subjects as part of a Graduate Diploma in Library and Information Management at the University of Canberra. His publications include an annotated bibliography of race walking and the young walker, and articles on a nineteenth century Victorian gold rush.

Sister Ursula Trower taught in primary and secondary schools conducted by the Good Samaritans in Queensland, New South Wales and South Australia for more than thirty years. She is an Arts Graduate from the University of Queensland, and in 1988 completed the Graduate Diploma in Information Management — Archives Administration at the University of New South Wales. She is a member of the Sydney branch of the ASA and is currently working in the Good Samaritan Generalate Archives situated at Glebe Point, New South Wales.